SteelFacts now features monthly pricing from Platts Steel Markets Daily, which publishes steel prices every business day.

SteelFacts – the source for information on the steel industry – through a partnership with Platts Steel Markets Daily has launched a new data cube for market analysis, which includes monthly pricing for the following steel products – reinforcing bar, hot-rolled coil, cold-rolled coil, steel plate and ferrous scrap.

In extensive beta-testing, SteelFacts' release of the new data elicited much excitement from its subscribers and the marketplace in general. The new information allows subscribers to access pricing data categorized by multiple global locations and currencies.

The SteelFacts debut of the Platts Steel Markets Daily pricing information reflects the broadening of a relationship between SteelFacts and Platts Steel Markets Daily that began in 2007.

SteelFacts' subscribers will now be able to view pricing information alongside production, shipment, trade and end - use market information.

"We're excited that Platts steel and scrap monthly prices have been recognized for independence and reliability and are featured on such a dynamic platform as SteelFacts, which also boasts the industry-critical data of the AISI, and makes it all available in a format that facilitates timely market and industry analyses," said Joe Innace, US managing editor, Platts Steel Markets Daily.

SteelFacts is the exclusive provider of the American Iron & Steel Institute's standard reports and statistics for the iron & steel industry. SteelFacts provides subscribers and interested parties with access to steel industry market information related to the domestic market along with relevant trade contribution to the marketplace in an easy-to-use and flexible online service.
